SPEAKING OUT

Writer seeks civil dialogue on appropriateness of mascot

To the editor:

In light of the killing of George Floyd at the hands of the police in Minneapolis, it's time as white people to reflect on our own personal and collective beliefs and grow and change as needed.

To that point, I'd like to start a dialogue about the use of The Rebels as the mascot for our very own Southwestern Jefferson County Consolidated Schools.

Briefly some info on me: I'm 41, originally from Hanover, the daughter of Tom and Sue Patterson, and attended Southwestern through the fourth grade before attending various schools throughout Indiana. After graduating from IU in 2001 with a degree in sociology, I moved to New Orleans to teach. I taught first, second and fourth grades at various schools, including at the William J. Frantz building that was integrated by Ruby Bridges in 1960 with the escort of U.S. Marshals. I eventually worked my way up to dean of students and principal before moving back to Indiana in July 2018, where I began work for a foster care agency and became a foster parent myself.

This issue has been on my mind for years, giving me lots of time to reflect upon why The Rebels should not be used as a mascot at any level of school, in any area of the country. The Rebels was the name of the Confederate Army during the Civil War, a war fought between the North and the South over slavery. The Rebel flag used the colors red and navy, and the character of Colonel Reb was designed in 1936 and used originally by Ole Miss.

From discussions I've had it seems that the choice by the student body of the newly consolidated Southwestern Jefferson County School's first graduating class ('61 I believe) was to choose The Rebels mascot based on the James Dean (Hoosier native) character in Rebel Without A Cause. The colors were a combination of the former Saluda and Hanover schools'

Marchers moved through downtown Madison from Gaines Park to the Broadway Gymnasium while supporting Friday's Black Lives Matter peaceful protest.

Protesters march for an accepting community

BY COLLIN OVERTON

Police shut down Broadway Street for close to two hours Friday night as more than 100 protesters and several onlookers gathered to rally for unity and peace in the aftermath of high-profile police brutality cases in other areas of the nation .

Protestors gathered at least twice at the Jefferson County Courthouse the week of June 1 to oppose racism as part of an anti-police brutality moment sweeping through major cities and small towns across the United States. But Friday's gathering was the largest so far in Madison, with locals coming together to protest the killings of George Floyd in Minneapolis, Breonna Taylor in Louisville and other incidents of police violence toward black Americans.

The crowd first gathered and packed tiny Gaines Park on the north end of Broadway around 7 p.m., the former location of Madison's all-black Broadway School that was closed in 1957 following the end of segregated schools in Indiana and later burned. Madison native and protest organizer Derek Cosby burned bundled sage to cleans and purify the area and provided instructions

SW graduate begs removal of offensive symbols

To the editor:

Up to now I have been silent on all the recent happenings around Black Lives Matter and the institutional racism in our country, not knowing what to say. But now, after listening and reading for days and seeing Ann's post, I want and have to respond. I have been waiting to see if this discussion would come up from my little hometown in Southern Indiana and thank goodness it has, and frankly, and to the point, I hope this Rebel mascot and Confederate flag are removed from our school ... immediately. It is time. It is way past time. The sad part about all of this is none of us were taught about what this flag and mascot really meant. Remember chanting during boys basketball games "the South will rise again!?" And this next memory is so hard to share. I personally am mortified. Fellow alumni, do you remember boy's basketball regional at Seymour High School in winter of 1974? We had finally won our sectional after decades of trying and so we moved on in the statewide tournament. Now, do you remember the Southwestern High School administration and teachers inviting any student (there were only 420 of us in the whole school!) to meet in our gym during sixth period to practice and become this gigantic cheer block, giving up curricular time to become a pep club? Do you also remember that the math department worked to graph out on paper in card club style, (only we would be using red, white and blue capes) who would wear what color to create the Confederate flag with home economics making the 250 red, white and blue capes and matching mittens? But here is the saddest memory. Fast forward after a week of practice we all got on buses and went to Seymour to a 5000-seat gym. It truly felt like the movie "Hoosiers." This little Cinderella team and hometown crowd came into the huge gym. We took our seats on the bleachers

City approves more events for July 4 celebration

BY MARK CAMPBELL

Although next month's Fourth of July Weekend in Madison will be missing its signature event — the 70th running of the Madison Regatta and Roostertail Music Festival — the city seems determined to make the most out of what is the community's most exciting holiday annually with fireworks, live music and a couple of block parties.

The city had previously announced a continuation of the annual fireworks program that has been a Saturday night staple of the Madison Regatta for decades and now the Board of Public Works Monday approved street closings for a block party on Broadway Street and live music on Mulberry Street.

Between the block party, music and fireworks, Madison should have something going on from 1 p.m. to at least

Jefferson man arrested on child molestation charge

BY COURIER STAFF REPORT

Indiana State Police arrested a Jefferson County man on a child molesting charge last week following an investigation by detectives at the Versailles Post.

Manuel Lopez Velasquez

Versailles post detectives began their investigation after being notified that a 13-year-old girl was reportedly pregnant. Officers determined that Manuel Lopez Velasquez, 26, was the father of the baby and arrested him Wednesday on a charge of child molesting, a Level 1 felony.

The pregnant teen was also reported to be living with Velasquez and the two were involved in a relationship, according to the ISP.

Velasquez was taken to Jefferson County Jail and remains there pending his initial appearance in Jefferson County Circuit Court. The investigation is ongoing.

The Indiana State Police was assisted by the Jefferson County Sheriff's Office and the Indiana Department of Child Services.

colors. It's unclear to me exactly when the switch to the Colonel Reb and association with the Confederate Flag began, however I know that my nephew's basketball team uses the Colonel Reb mascot on their sweatshirts.

Whatever the original intent behind the choice of mascots, the name and the use of the Colonel Reb and Confederate Flag imagery is at the very least uneducated, and worst, racist.

Indiana fought on the side of the Union during the Civil War. Madison was an important hub of the Underground Railroad. Those are things to be proud of here in Jefferson County. So it doesn't make sense to me why we would associate with the South and the Confederacy. I assure you we are not Southern.

Additionally, the Confederate Flag and Colonel Reb character are racist symbols. They were used by the Confederate Army who was fighting for the right of one group of human beings to OWN another group of human beings.

It is a matter of white privilege to get upset and defend the use of these symbols when our black friends, family members, and neighbors are still, even in 2020 after years and years of protest and fight for change, not afforded the same considerations as we as white people are. It is the very least we can do to be supportive.

Before you dismiss me as just some crazy liberal (which I am, by the way), just know that I am not alone in thinking that it's time for Southwestern to get on the right side of history and change their mascot. I've been supported by family members, Southwestern alumni from 1997 (what would have been my graduating class if I'd gone to high school here) and 1968 (my dad's graduating class), and from friends both local and far away.

I know it's uncomfortable to have to admit something we've done or believe in for years and years without a second thought is racist. It doesn't mean we are bad people. I don't think the majority of people who live in Jefferson County or went to Southwestern are actively racist. But if you're not anti-racist and a white ally to our black and brown friends, you need to reassess.

Please take a minute to reach out to me either on Facebook or via email (juapatte@gmail.com) with support or disagreement. My only request is that you keep it civil, and if you can't resort from name calling, don't engage. I'm a person, just like you, trying to find my place in this world. I have a family and friends who support me and don't want to see my good name dragged through the mud.

With much respect,

and they passed out the capes, mittens and hats just like we had practiced all week and then on cue, 250 students put them on and suddenly ... a gigantic Confederate flag appears in front of everyone in the gym ... 250 members strong from a public high school in Southern Indiana. My heart is racing right now and it is not out of excitement. It is out of shame and regret. Those of us in that cheer block had no idea what we had just done. We just thought we were supporting our basketball team. There had to be black people and hopefully at that time, other people of social conscious in the gym that night and I cannot imagine their reaction to this blatant, yet ignorant, act of racism. Last year I shared this memory with my California high school students. They were silent because they were so shocked and appalled and respectfully did not want to hurt my feelings or embarrass me. I asked for their responses and opinions and finally the questions and opinions came at me like bullets.

They asked me why did we do this ... didn't we know any better, how could you? I told them, we didn't know any better, but I told them, that was no excuse. Even though we were just having school spirit, we should have known ... we should have known. Now of course we know better. Ann, you are right. This mascot and flag are offensive, more than offensive. They are unconscionable. They represent so much oppression and white power. Southwestern High School I urge you — no I BEG you — to remove these offensive symbols from our school immediately. You must do the right thing for the sake of all alumni, current and future students. Do it now. Everyone please share this. This story needs to be told.

MARCH

to marchers — some wearing protective masks and carrying signs — on how the march would be carried out.

Protesters Friday said they were not there to oppose local police, but ignite a network in Madison for "showing up" and making change, whether through voting, organizing or simply making their presence known, Cosby said.

"If you really want to make a change, this is the way to do it, this was the spark. Now we all have a network. We have people to call on if we need to show up to the town meeting to make sure that they do what the town wants, they have a call-to-action-type network," he later said.

Scott Kollman, a pastor at New Life Fellowship on Clifty Drive also delivered an message and praised protesters for "looking at the man in the mirror" and helping make a change. After speeches from other organizers and a prayer, the group began its march up Broadway to Main Street and then down Broadway to toward the riverfront.

People of different ages and races chanted the names of Taylor and Floyd as they passed the Broadway Fountain and the intersection of Main Street. Madison Police blocked off that section of the roadway to give marchers safe passage to the other side of Broadway and parked at both ends of the street to keep the area under control, which organizers were not expecting, Cosby said.

Some protesters came in large groups and chanted through megaphones. Others attended with their significant others or families and carried their children on their shoulders. Two golf carts driven by young boys followed alongside the crowd offering water to thirsty marchers.

When the marchers reached the other side of Broadway, they stopped in front of Brown Gym and formed a circle as several people spoke on unity, race relations, injustice and coming together for a common good.

Lionel Smith, a lifelong resident of Madison, spoke about the need for all people to take accountability toward eliminating hate and negative perceptions of African Americans.

"I see a lot of family and friends out here right now … the pastor down there said it takes a change to look at the man in the mirror. And I think right now as I look at everybody in this crowd, you guys took the change and said 'I.' You said 'I'm the person who's going to make the change' and that's what it takes," Smith said.

Toccara Bumphus, a Madison native now living in Westfield, talked about a religious obligation to stand against racism.

"If this happens to our white brothers and sisters, or our Mexican brothers and sisters, anybody, we have a right to intercede and stand in the gap. So that's why we're here today … because what you've done unto me, you've done unto Christ," Bumphus said.

Following more speeches and a coordinated kneeling in the middle of the street, the group turned and marched back toward Gaines Park.

More speeches followed after their arrival, along with a candlelight vigil and a group singing of "Lean on Me." By 8:30 p.m. the group began dispersing with some leaving while others socialized outside Gaines Park.

Cosby said the idea for the protest came from a Zoom call between his brother, Phil Cosby, and other friends and family on the subject of racism that was shared to social media. Phil began organizing the event just over a week ago, and the news spread quickly around town via word of mouth.

Cosby, who was recently laid off from his job in Indianapolis as a trade show organizer, took over promotion for the protest and made a Facebook event page. But most of the participants knew of it from word of mouth and different circles around town, especially with the younger people who showed up, Cosby said.

Phil Cosby met with City Councilman Curtis Chatham, who got behind the idea once he understood the nature of the event and played a big part in it running smoothly, said Cosby. Mayor Bob Courtney and the Madison Police Department were also receptive and Courtney attended to listen but not speak, Cosby said.

That played to the strength of the protest, which at the end of the day was meant to open minds, bring people together and provide a platform for residents who want Madison to be a more accepting place, he said.

"That group that showed up there, they're willing to drop all of that — the Republican, the Democrat, the black or white, the rich, the poor — they were willing to drop that just to come together as a community and just say 'Hey, we know that the world is crazy right now, but this is what we want to see in our community: inclusion, acceptance, equality.' And that was the beautiful part of all of that, and it was truly the meaning behind this protest," Cosby said.

Mind your sneeze

ANNIE LANE
DEAR ANNIE

Dear Annie: Throughout the coronavirus pandemic, my husband doesn't cough or sneeze into his arm. He sometimes coughs into his hand. No matter how hard I try to instill in him how he could be affecting everyone in the household, he argues that it's bull.

His excuses include that he doesn't want to get his shirt sleeve or bare arm messed up, or that he forgets. Is there any way you can put in print how important this is? Thank you. — Mind Your Manners

Dear Mind Your Manners: Your husband might say that your requests are baloney, but it sounds like he is being the bully here. Sneezing into his hand is disgusting and affects everyone around him. Continue to tell him to knock it off, and if need be, schedule a call with your medical doctor, who can go over the importance of using a tissue or sneezing into your elbow. Tell your husband that if he has to sneeze, he should excuse himself and get as far away from everyone as possible. You might also want to invest in a good, old-fashioned handkerchief.

Dear Annie: This is regarding the woman who had a problem with her sister's husband, who refused to come into the house to a gathering because he would have to take off his shoes. You are probably right that he is a stubborn louse.

But here is another thought that people who have historic wood floors in a house surrounded by gravel should consider. They can acquire shoe coverings in several sizes, like the ones house tours sometimes require, and offer them to visitors if they are uncomfortable in their stocking feet for whatever reason.

My sister has those. She bought them because I have had major reconstructive foot surgery on both feet, which means that I have no natural padding in my heels. I only wear tie shoes with supportive inserts to support and cushion my feet. If I were to have to go just with socks on a hardwood floor, I would gingerly hobble to the nearest chair and sit there the whole party.

To avoid ever having to do this, I keep a few of the coverings from my sister in the car so I can go back and get them if need be. However, I have never had to get them, because my other friends are tolerant of my shoes, even though they and other guests are in stocking feet.

People who have never had such foot problems may not realize the torture that going in stocking feet could be causing someone else. — A Sister With Extreme Foot Problems

Dear Foot Problems: Disposable booties are a great suggestion. Thank you!

Finding calm

ANNIE LANE
DEAR ANNIE

Dear Annie: My mother and I usually have a very good relationship, but for the few months leading up to quarantine, and during quarantine, we have been getting on each other's nerves. Whenever one of us does something, the other criticizes it. Sometimes I have no idea what to say, and I can't control my anger toward her. When I can't control my anger, that leads to us getting into big arguments.

I realize that I have not been the best daughter at times, but I don't know what to do to make sure that this relationship doesn't fall apart. — Imperfect Daughter

Dear Imperfect Daughter: Keep doing exactly what you are doing. You're aware of your anger; you're aware that it triggers you; and you even acknowledge that maybe you haven't been the best daughter at times. All of that makes you a great daughter. We can't be perfect all the time and never lose our patience. The goal is to realize our shortcomings and work on them — exactly what you are doing.

Now for the action part. Breathwork is a great way to help calm your anger. Next time you feel yourself getting worked up, go into a room by yourself and take 15 minutes to slow your breath. You can do this sitting up or lying down. Put your hands on your belly as you inhale and feel your stomach puff out. Then, as you exhale, let the natural rhythm of your breath bring your stomach down. Do this until you feel your body settling down. Eventually, you will retrain your body's response to anger and naturally be more relaxed in daily life. Who knows, maybe your mom will see how much more relaxed you are and join in.

Dear Annie: You told Not Stinky Anymore, "Tea tree oil is completely natural, so it has a low chance of side effects." That is incorrect. First, most poisons, carcinogens and toxins I can think of are completely natural: ultraviolet radiation, asbestos, cyanide, arsenic, botulism and aflatoxin, to name just a few.

Second, tea tree oil is safe if you're not allergic to it. I saw many cases of allergic contact dermatitis to limonene, one of about 100 chemical compounds found in tea tree oil. Tea tree oil does have some antimicrobial and anti-inflammatory activity, but it clearly is not safe just because it's natural. Peanuts are natural and good for you but can kill you if you're allergic to them!

There are several good treatments, all topical, for bromhidrosis (smelly sweat) including tea tree oil, but I never used it in my practice because of the risk of an allergic reaction.

The incidence of positive patch tests to limonene (in tea tree oil) has ranged from 0.1% to 3.5 % in several studies. It would be interesting to know how many new cases of contact dermatitis there will be in the next six months in people who read your column today, but right now there are more important things to worry about. — Skin Doctor

Dear Skin Doctor: You are correct that just because something is natural doesn't mean it can't be dangerous. Thank you for pointing that out.

CASES

That new cases brings to 40,430 the total number of Indiana residents known to have the novel coronavirus following corrections to the previous day's total. A total of 2,251 Hoosiers are confirmed to have died from COVID-19, an increase of 11 over Sunday and 34 over Friday. Another 182 probable deaths have been reported based on clinical diagnoses in patients for whom no positive test is on record. Deaths are reported based on when data are received by ISDH and occurred over multiple days.

Meanwhile, intensive care unit and ventilator capacity remain steady in Indiana. As of today, more than 41% of ICU beds and more than 83% of ventilators are available.

To date, 355,829 tests have been reported to the ISDH, up from 348,391 on Sunday.

Beginning Monday, any Hoosier seeking COVID-testing can obtain it through one of the state-sponsored OptumServe sites, regardless of whether they are at high risk or have symptoms.

The local testing locations are the King's Daughters' Health Convenient Care Center, located at 443 E. Clifty Drive, in Madison, in Jefferson County and the King's Daughters' Health clinic, 1190 W. Main St., Suite 2, Vevay, in Switzerland County.

To find other testing locations around Indiana, visit www.coronavirus.in.gov and click on the COVID-19 testing information link. More than 200 locations are available around the state.

CELEBRATION

11 p.m. on Saturday, July 4, making for one big day-long party to celebrate what is scheduled to be the beginning of the last of five stages in Gov. Eric Holcomb's Back on Track Indiana COVID-19 recovery strategy.

Holcomb has penciled in July 4 as the day he will launch Stage 5 of Back on Track, meaning conventions, sports events, fairs, festivals and like events may resume while restrictions will also be lifted at amusement parks, water parks, and similar facilities with the caveat that social distancing guidelines should be maintained and although optional, face coverings should be considered.

BACK ON TRACK: STAGE 5

Gov. Eric Holcomb has penciled in July 4 as the day he will launch Stage 5 of Back on Track, meaning conventions, sports events, fairs, festivals and like events may resume while restrictions will also be lifted at amusement parks, water parks, and similar facilities with the caveat that social distancing guidelines should be maintained and although optional, face coverings should be considered.

Mayor Bob Courtney said Monday that while the number of events planned for July 4 should give local residents a long awaited chance to resume the festivals Madisonians so enjoy, he hopes residents will have fun while participating safely.

"We need to do it safely and continue to follow social distancing requirements," Courtney said, hoping to head off an increased in cases of the novel coronavirus that has shut down activity for weeks already.

The Broadway Block Party is an annual event hosted by the Historic Broadway Hotel and Tavern as party of Regatta Weekend. This year it will run from 2-11 p.m. with Broadway closed from Second to Main streets to accommodate the crowd. The lower portion of Broadway Street will also be closed to provide parking for the city's golf cart community attending the fireworks program on the Ohio River.

The city of Madison will close Broadway to the Brown Gymnasium. Madison Director of Community Relations Hannah Fagen said by setting aside that area, cart drivers and their passengers will have a place to gather safely and park their carts.

The city has previously approved closing Vaughn Drive from Ferry Street on the east to Vernon Street on the west to provide ample social distancing space for what is always a massive crowd for the fireworks.

Brent Spry, one of the organizers of the Regatta's Roostertail Music Festival, was before Public Works Monday requesting and receiving approval for a street closing on Mulberry Street for a block party featuring live music and possibly food trucks. Spry said details are still being finalized but the hope is to make the show a free admission event.

In other business, the Board of Public Works:

- Approved a $1,316,695 bid by All Star Paving of Seymour to resurface a long list of city streets funding by a matching state Community Cross's Grant. A total of five bids were received with All Star, the same company who won the bid locally last year, submitting the lowest offer. The bid actually came in slightly lower than estimates the city received from project engineers.
- Approved a $12,900 bid by Dan Cristiana Excavating to cover equipment and labor costs for yard waste grinding at the city's Solid Waste Transfer Station. The bid covers mulching trees, limbs and yard waste with all materials remaining on site.
